Prolefeed Studios is pleased to announce "Why Are You Here?" a new online mini-documentary by Wisconsin filmmaker Brian Standing. "Why Are You Here?" introduces viewers to Madison participants in the May Day 2006 protests against federal anti-immigrant laws.

On May 1, 2006, hundreds of thousands of immigrant workers across the country walked off their jobs to participate in "The Great American Boycott," nationwide protests against legislation proposed by Wisconsin congressman James Sensenbrenner that would make it a felony to enter the United States illegally. In Madison, five thousand protesters descended on the state capitol. Prolefeed Studios was there, and we had just one question for the crowd, "Why are you here?" Responding in English and Spanish, ralliers talked not only about their motivations to participate in that day's events, but also about what brought them to the United States.

"Why Are You Here?" lets you browse through people's responses and view short video segments in a variety of downloadable formats. There are also links to news coverage of the days events, editorials, and resources for more information about the burgeoning immigrant power movement. You can visit "Why Are You Here?" at
